

“Personal Responsibility”

By: Jack Muellerleile

“Personal Responsibility” means one holds himself personally responsible for something. The acceptance of a particular burden of obligation. The state or fact of being responsible.

Effective leaders hold themselves personally responsible for the outcomes generated by the forces at their command.

Loyal followers of effective leaders hold themselves similarly responsible individually and as a team or group.

When effectively trained, financed and suitably equipped, teams with this sense of commitment led by one who is just as committed rarely fail to achieve their objectives in a timely and convincing manner.

Finding such people is most difficult today.
